TeleCommunication Systems to Host Congressman C. A. Dutch Ruppertsberger, State and Local Leaders at New Technology Center Ribbon-Cutting Event

Anne Arundel County Facility to House Company's Art of Exploitation University, Cyber Intelligence and Satellite Operations Centers

Note: Comtech Acquired TCS on 2/23/2016

ANNAPOLIS, MD, May 11, 2011 -- TeleCommunication Systems, Inc. (TCS) (NASDAQ: TSYS), a world leader in highly reliable and secure mobile communication technology, today announced that it will formally dedicate its new technology facility located in Hanover, Maryland with a ribbon-cutting ceremony on May 18. The event will feature remarks by Congressman C. A. Dutch Ruppertsberger and county and state representatives. The new 36,000 square foot building that features state-of-the-art technology will be home to the company's cybersecurity group, Art of Exploitation University, satellite operations center, and East Coast lab and data center.

"Maryland's thriving IT and cybersecurity industries make the state an ideal place to do business," said Maurice B. Tose, chairman and CEO of TeleCommunication Systems, Inc. "This is why we chose Hanover to be the site of our third TCS facility in Anne Arundel County. In keeping with our ongoing support for the CyberMaryland initiative, we're expanding our Art of Exploitation University where government and commercial students receive sophisticated training in a variety of high-value cybersecurity disciplines. Our new technology center will also deliver world-class satellite communications solutions to our customers around the globe."

Who: Remarks will be made at the invitation-only event by the following (listed in order of appearance):

- | Maurice B. Tose, Chairman and CEO, TeleCommunication Systems, Inc.
